

ONE: Earth Day Webinar Invitation

Subject: Celebrate Earth Day with two herbal elders 🌍🌸

Elders carry memory, [FIRST NAME GOES HERE].

They hold the long view, the one that stretches back before our lifetimes. They know what endures and what doesn't, they've watched enough seasons turn to know what to let go of and what to protect.

In every culture, at every time, we have turned to our elders to find our way.

Our women elders — mothers, grandmothers, and matriarchs — carry especially potent wisdom. There is something in the feminine elder that knows how to tend to the people in her care, and to the thread of life itself.

In honor of Earth Day, we're gathering with two of our favorite women elders from the ONE community...

ONE

And we have elders who are more than human, too: the plants are our elders. They hold the memory of this Earth in their roots, their blooms, their seeds, their chemistry.

Every adaptation, every survival, every act of resilience is written into them. They are a living library of planetary wisdom.

Throughout human history, women have played a special role in working with plants. Women are the herbalists, the gardeners, the seed keepers, the land tenders. They are the ones who are largely responsible for passing the old herbal knowledge to the next generation, and calling it back into themselves at the same time.

Join us with Pam Montgomery and Kate Gilday, two longtime friends, two beloved teachers, sharing what the plants have taught them and what they believe is coming next for all of us.
